USE OF PICTORIAL AIDS TO IMPROVE ADHERENCE IN LOW LITERACY

KP Lewis, PharmD, CACP, BCACP, CPP

Campbell University College of Pharmacy and Health Sciences; Southern Regional Area Health Education Center

PURPOSE

Medication adherence and patient education are of utter importance in the management of disease states; an important aspect of medication adherence is health literacy. Conveying information to improve adherence to patients who have low literacy levels is a challenge. This study was conducted to assess the improvements in clinical outcomes, medication adherence and patient satisfaction with the use of a pill box using pictorial aids.

DESIGN METHODS

Patient literacy level assessed by the library staff and physician, then referred to pharmacy for education on disease states (diabetes, hypertension, hyperlipidemia) and importance of adhering to medications as prescribed. A usual pill box was modified for the patient using pictorial aids. Patient's blood pressure, blood sugar averages will be assessed at baseline and weeks 2, 4, 8, and 12. Patient satisfaction will be assessed at week 12. Medication adherence is assessed via pill counts at each visit.

RESULTS/EXPECTED RESULTS

Patient's blood pressure and fasting blood sugar was lower at weeks 2 and 4 compared to baseline. It is expected that the patient's blood pressure and blood sugars will remain lower than baseline with continued adherence. It is also expected that the patient will still be using and will be satisfied with the modified pill box at the 12-week period.

DISCUSSION/CONCLUSION

Modification of "conventional" educational methods and appropriate education can effectively improve a patient's medication adherence. This, in turn, ultimately improves outcomes. This process can hopefully be expanded to others with low health literacy or other literacy issues.

Activities included: shadow days in pharmacy classes, career awareness day and tutoring. Once a quarter, student topic discussions were led by the pharmacy students to increase students' skills in communicating and collaborating. Fifteen high school young men and women signed up to participate, along with 20 pharmacy students (5 students had 2 mentors). The pilot is set to end May 2013. Both mentor and mentee satisfaction with the program and suggestions will be obtained.
